Objective

The objective of the Fund is to increase the value of its investments over a minimum of five years, through a combination of capital growth, which is profit on an investment, and income, which is money paid out from an investment such as interest and dividends. The Fund is actively managed, which means the Investment Manager decides which investments to buy and when, and will invest at least 80% in other collective investment schemes, investment trusts and exchange-traded funds.

Market

Most markets witnessed a slight pullback over the month of December, which nonetheless capped a successful year in terms of absolute returns across many Equity and Fixed Income asset classes. The MSCI All Country World Index ended the month down -0.9% in GBP terms with the biggest impact being losses in UK and US Equity markets, while Emerging Markets and Japanese equities posted gains over the month. Fixed Income markets were also broadly negative over the month, led by longer-dated high-quality US Treasury bonds and Sterling denominated bonds. This was driven by the US Federal Reserve (central bank) cutting interest rates in December but indicating that they would perform fewer interest rate cuts in 2025 than the market had anticipated, due to what they perceive to be stubbornly high inflation.

US Equity Markets finished the month down -2.4% in US Dollar terms, however a strengthening of the USD vs GBP translated this into a loss of only -0.9% for Sterling investors. As it is year end, we think it is very much worth reflecting on just how uniquely strong recent US equity market returns have been. The S&P 500 index of US equities returned +27.3% for 2024, which compares to +9.5% for UK Equities, +2.8% for Continental European equities and just over +10% for Japanese and Emerging Market names, in GBP terms. For the second year in a row, the nature of the US equity outperformance has been exceptionally concentrated in the largest, technology-oriented names, often referred to as the "magnificent seven". While the size-weighted S&P 500 index was up +27.3%, in GBP terms, for the year, the equal-weighted version of the index was up roughly half as much. In the context of the extremely strong outperformance of large-cap, technology-oriented US names relative to everything else, coupled with the fact that they now trade on very expensive valuations, we continue to be focused on maintaining some exposure to that upside momentum while also having multiple other potential return drivers across diverse geographies, company sizes and investment styles.

Performance

In December, your Fund returned -0.9%, in line with its IA sector comparator. The Fund was up +5.2% for the year ending 2024 and since its launch on 17th October 2022, has generated cumulative returns of +14.3%.

Given its risk profile, Fixed Income makes up the largest component of this Fund at 40%. The sell-off witnessed in high-quality global government bonds drove the majority of the Fund's negative return this month as the Bloomberg Global Aggregate Index dropped -0.8% in GBP hedged terms.

Our Tactical Asset Allocation had a roughly flat impact on your Fund's performance over the month as the gains from being overweight Japanese equity and underweight Continental European equity were offset by our overweight to UK equities.

The rise in long-dated interest rates over the course of the month proved a challenge for exposures and managers exposed to that risk, such as our long-dated US Treasury ETF and the ClearBridge Global Infrastructure Income Fund. The selloff is slightly surprising in the context of an increasingly benign global inflation environment and the continued weakening in the US labour market (and potentially the wider economy). This dynamic means that US interest rates are further into restrictive territory, and we continue to like these exposures going into the new year. Outperformers in December included the AQR Managed Futures Fund and our large-cap US growth exposure which we access via an Amundi ETF. Our European physical carbon allowances exposure also rallied into the year end as natural gas prices rose. Higher natural gas prices lead industries to utilise coal as a fuel source, which is cheaper but more carbon intensive. This, in turn, boosts demand for carbon allowances.

As we enter the new year, which will no doubt bring a range of uncertainties and challenges, we continue to have strong confidence that the best course of action for generating sustainable long-term, risk-adjusted investment returns involves a global diverse portfolio comprised of multiple complementary investment styles.
